Keynote Title: "Integrating conscious knowledge with subconscious insight: The essence of self- and career construction counselling during the Covid-19" pandemic"

Abstract: In Part One of this paper, the emphasis is on fundamental changes in the world of work (driven by Work 4.0 and the imminent Work 5.0) that are aggravating many of the challenges associated with the lack of contextualised career counselling. Many scholars have recently emphasized the importance of conducting research on and developing, implementing, and promoting contextualised career counselling theory, research, practice, and policy in both individual and group contexts. The ultimate aim is to promote the vision of affording all people the opportunity to 'make meaning', rekindle a sense of hope, design purposeful and successful work lives. This shift is consistent with recent calls for the decolonisation of career psychology in Global, but, especially, Global South contexts. In Part Two of the paper, the focus shifts to a discussion of the research outcomes of integrative self- and career construction counselling in individual in addition to group contexts in Global North as well as in Global South contexts. Integrating conscious knowledge with subconscious insight comprises a key element of this approach. The frame of reference of the impact of the coronavirus (Covid-19) pandemic and its ripple effect on the world of work globally is elaborated on and the consequent, increasing need for telehealth (including telepsychology and tele-career counseling) is underscored.
